Archive of Persian exile and revolutionary serials

Fifteen banker's boxes of serials, a total of 3,870 items, including one or more issues of 247 different Persian-language serials, 31 different English-language serials, and 14 stand-alone items. $20,000.

This archive was assembled by a resident of California who published his own short-lived newspaper, as well as being heavily involved in the Persian-American film scene. Further details available upon request

The collection includes scarce publications from the ferment of the 1979 revolution published within Iran, and numerous publications from the diaspora in the revolution's aftermath, reflecting a wide variety of political, religious, and social perspectives. There are a handful of publications representing exiled Jewish and Assyrian communities from Iran. From the local coverage of community magazines and newspapers issued in places as disparate as Silicon Valley, Florida, Vancouver, London or Arizona, one can glimpse the efforts of exiled Iranians to adapt to their new surroundings and flourish in place, without losing focus on continuing developments back in Iran. Internationally circulated papers from political activists in exile showcase the spectrum of opinion, ranging from Marxist to Democratic Constitutionalist to Royalist, that motivated many who had fled Iran. There is also, to a lesser degree, representation of the sorts of domestic Iranian post-revolutionary publications that were of interest to a highly educated exile, such as arts and literature magazines.

While many publications have a masthead or a title page in English, content should be assumed to be in Persian unless otherwise stated. (A list of English-language publications comes near the end of the inventory below). If a title is given in transliteration on the publication itself, we have used that transliteration even if it is at variance with standard orthography. In cases where publications share a title, such as پیشرو, the transliteration may differ on this list, even though the title is the same, because the publications themselves give different transliterations - hence Pishro and Pishrow, or Shahr Farang, Shahre Farang, and Shahrefarang. Years in the Solar Hegira calendar used in Iran have usually been left as SH rather than being converted to CE.

A

Abrar ابرار

Many issues have eye-catching graphics; there were many damaged issues with covers removed for this reason. Some are rather worn, but all issues present here should be in at least scannable condition, with cover still present if it is detached (only a couple have this particular problem). A nice representative selection of this eye-catching a culturally important publication.
